

Ludic Reverie

RENJ

Table of Contents

Foreword	1
Never Be The Same	2
This Side of The Mountain	3
Little Willpower	4
Keep Keep Keep	5
Awake and Aware	6
Sweet, Innocent Child	7
The Things We Do	8
Salty and Nostalgic	10
Ever Existent	11
Unthink	12

Foreword

Welcome to "Ludic Reverie," a 10-poem collection that delves into the intricacies of resilience and self-discovery. This collection explores the journey of picking oneself up after setbacks, embracing the thrill of taking risks, and coming to terms with the choices made along the way. It serves as a heartfelt dialogue with past selves, especially the child within, as it reflects on dreams and aspirations. The thoughts that dance in these reveries are now shared, capturing the nuances of growth and reflection. It is a rather brief collection that shares what it wants to. So here you have Ludic Reverie.

Walking through seeds of choice,
Rustling with the wish for a voice.
Congested streets full of hearts,
Busy lives of mosaic parts.

The minds changing like tides,
Bleeding and healing wide.
Time fades from sight,
Mining, thirling about what's right.

In a world of utter touch-and-go,
A world full of forgetting what you know,
Cover me in shades of greatness,
Pique the interest of happiness.

When all it does is fold,
You can try to change it to gold.
You'll shout a certain name,
And you will never be the same.

When all weapons drop dead
And surrender the days of dread,
The brave turn into the wild,
The rivers of rigor it defied.

For what appears high and true,
And battered and blue,
Comes a day that it turns right—
It stays blue but gets bright.

The past is not behind,
Nor is it in front of the mind.
You walk with it even after,
And you are there to remember.

When all these strings unfold,
The experience turns you gold.
You get to underline your name,
But you will never be the same.

They raise amendments on the bloodside,
My voice left on the cliff's blindside.
Twisted words to win the people,
Twisted knives to kill the people.

My foes are my friends at birth,
My birthright is of small girth.
I touched saddles to bring forth
Needs that deserve some worth.

But thorns are the pavements,
In sorrow is their amusement.
Their version of wonderland
Is where they steal the men's land.

They reached the summit,
The moon, but wanted more beyond it.
The greed is deep in their system,
And the system is them.

Men fall astray to their void—
A gravity, in emotion, is devoid.
Wonder is suppressed
In favor of the beauty of the regressed.

My voice on the blindside,
In my principles, I tried to abide.
But the stars have long died;
The hopes have long dried.

I'm on this side of the mountain.
The amount of blood is mounting.
Your hands made me crazy;
This is how you made me to be.

The greed has led me to freedom,
And I turned into your kind, and some.
For your days are reigns I crush,
For you turned me into a new lush.

Suns and moons of blank stares on the wall,
Traces of rivers carved onto the clothes they fall,
Spelling out the grace of the color gray,
Stuck in the hole of holding the play.

Knives out, the sheaths of repressed ideation,
And into the breeze of nightly intuition,
Where every rhyme is an end in itself,
And the line's breadth is always out of breath.

Prairies have grown tall grasses,
The magician could not amaze the masses,
With a lot of whirrs to write about,
But a struggle for the proper words to let out.

Scoring all over the days of wild,
Maternal days of sadness that bear child.
Running through the wide abyss of the sky,
A lone meteor falling from its fly.

Wishes upon those who hear come in a list,
A dream for time to just not exist.
Lies at the lines of a personal diary,
And a whole lot more to carry.

Trying to find the way back home,
Only to find that it has long been gone.
Trying to convince that being lost has a reason,
And why souls commit such treason.

Eyes that stare at the soft like wildflower,
An existence only held by little willpower,
Waiting for a blow that rips the fluff off,
Running like regrets on marathon non-stop.

A pen dull as the mind in which I try to write,
And a pair of feet that could not stand upright.
These strings of false starts have to end,
But for now, where do I begin?

Keep your little eyes closed,
Keep your dreaming in prose.
For days to come turn you bold;
The years to bear put you on hold.

Keep that world of your own,
And keep its portal unknown.
For they will tear your castle;
Your bedsheet doors will rustle.

Keep drawing in the leaves;
Pretend they are cash to sieve.
For they will be dead and brown,
And in their absence, you'll drown.

Keep your head up to the sky,
And open your arms to fly.
They will take the best of you,
And tie you to the tree you grew.

The trees fall on their own,
The grass outgrows its home.
Twinkling stars turn to dust,
That covers your mind's rust.
Seasoned veterans have been there—
It's best you stay here.
Hold on, as waves crush you;
Don't let it take you.
Stay seven years old, dear;
The dark is only your fear.
Look at it now; you're seventeen—
The light isn't your friend.
If only I knew ten years ago
That nothing is all I'd ever know,
Then I would have lived in that world,
And stood still as the wind swirled.

Behold, the heaven is in its prime,
Dazzling and wondrous to seek.
Still and unchanged by the run of time,
Awake and aware of its peak.

It comes in shape of a beautiful flower,
The contemplations it gives birth.
But it's a plate wither will devour,
Rot, shed, and wish remnants to go forth.

Looking at the Sun the day it was born,
Latching to the hopes of a fate ground.
Still upholding 'til it got torn,
Sunset, heaven—prime is not a substitute for the bound.

All rivers flow to a devouring sea,
Everything that makes it becomes brine.
It may be fast, or time may slide softly away,
But it kills even its own sign.

So here, in a ship one man short of death,
You cannot rely on a beautiful sunset.
The color of its rays nor the light's breadth
Will tell you which windward to bet.

Either you're immortalized on a mound,
Or lie in the origins of life itself.
One good reason that you reach the bound,
Is that you get a full circle of yourself.

You get to have yourself on a summer morn,
Or not, or meet your demise here.
Might as well foresee the way they'll mourn,
If there is anyone left to shed a tear.

And that, my friend, is your sign to follow:
You create your own ship to sink.
It's up to you to sink yourself below,
For a man devours what he thinks.

Summer stayed on short; city life goes forth.
Shed the skin of the fleeting, back to the table of dreaming.

7

Oh, sweet, innocent child,
That place is so far.
So keep your thoughts wild,
For the time they escape is far.

Falling is like healing—break bones to start new.
Keep your eyes breathing; always keep wonder through.

Oh, sweet, innocent child,
That time is so far.
Keep the longing mild,
For you wouldn't get far.

And the days will haunt you,
They'll hunt the rest of you.
But you get to let it turn,
And put them to burn.
All your matches are yours,
Even if they can't with force.
I turned my head to space I bent,
And asked myself where I went.
Wrote all I could find,
Even those out of reach of my mind.
As the ships sank along,
And so did my songs.
So, kid, buckle up and wait,
We still have a future to berate.
That time was so far,
But we have come so far.
All there is now is handmade,
From all the things you're afraid.

So keep writing, and keep longing.
Keep the stories breathing.
You'll be among the stars,
Kid, you have come so far.

The same stars shine above different people,
The plates we stand on, shift as the constellations do.
Each second passes and it becomes another moment,
A spinning wheel parted between beautiful and painful.
Bleeding hearts, plot twists turned, out we go,
Trying to soul in desired stories out this lament.

Two grains of sand, by chance, crash on the shore,
Bumping as the waves enter the alleys of force.
Solitary was the companion for the disfigured fates,
Catalogued in the faces they bore.
Hours and days of watching planets off course,
They line up and open the heavenly gate.

And in my every "why" comes your "because,"
And in my cry, comes the strokes of letters I forge.
Thumping deep in the heart of the roaring sea,
Is the peace covered, devoid of truce.
The grains of sand sticking, passing through gorges,
Where they sink and come to be.

They stay between the perils of those large rocks,
Fighting their place in locked lands,
A fate to which the wind could only blow,
And feet that only stand to be mocked.
Chance is an abusive flood carried in grands,
Forever stuck in the clay of the riverside they flow.

In the marshes they find their way to rest,
Looking at the sky and feel it become limitless.
Holding their hands, swearing they won't part,
Even if it calls for a lifetime arrest.
And the wells for their hearts are becoming bottomless,
Filled by the streaks of a cosmic dart.

Pinning their eyes on the stars that align,
Brought about by the sturdusts divine.
The kiss of the night that shall end so well,
And so was the death that has yet to come then.
War rages from the skies, to the valley it ins,
And they find themselves carried by then.

They find their ways back to that fateful shore,
Parting from each other, but sharing a lifetime.
Becoming pieces of memories tied to the tides,
Rooting back to what all these had been for.
Sharing the last breadth of their lifeline,
Engraved on the history, immortalized after they died.

The stones thrown that shifted the constellations back,
The grains of sand became stars that look at us now.
They spin, like we are in this dance of faith.
Tied to the blanket of the darkness vast,
Spinning dancers during the night of the know-how,
The things we do extend beyond this side of fate.

The lighthouse keeps me awake,
Safe and away from these waves,
Shedding rays on the steps I make,
Basking in the baskets I weave.

Augusts are harsh yet beautiful,
Starry and meteoric as they rise,
Salty and nostalgic as they fall;
The eyes can only see the price.

In a crossroads of 'either,'
And the ground that consumes,
Daylights fly to remember—
You could only etch in mind to resume.

The sea will not wait for you;
Dissatisfaction will haunt you.
You come to terms to feel anew,
And you get the lines to tell a few.

The unhappiest finds its candy,
Fixing the letters on the board,
Or holding himself brandy,
And keeping the chaos in accord.

The trove that covers this cove,
A sphere that pokes its insides.
Washed ashore, an eternal move,
Yet no strokes can preside.

The sky and paper weep;
The dark breathes a sigh.
The ink blots are in too deep,
Only words can make you fly.

You spot yourself a dressing room
And choose confused.
The lights on stage shall roam,
But the words you do, do not refuse.

It's the space between my breaths,
Heavy, hard, ever-existent.
A cold night well spent,
Forever stuck as I went.

My heart restarts on the table,
Trying to perform a miracle.
A buzz, an electrocution—disabled,
Skipping beats, skipping wibbles.

Prying breath comes to see,
Death comes to greet thee.
At the last expense, sure it be,
That it stays on me.

The iron bands collapse in-valley,
My ribs torn; I lose memory.
But the wind, out my plea,
Is the same as presently.

Up above the corridors of guilt,
Just to talk how this could wilt.
I die, a burial built,
A room, a heart, and a life to melt.

Saw the light, but I'm already here;
Staying could be a fear.
One of my hands forever on the steer,
The other trying to stay dear.

It's almost time for the moon to set,
Time to shine the Sun—upset.
In between the cracks of dawn, we meet,
A plea to cut the death.

But I can't, and I'm going,
I'll be one with the wind blowing.
But do know of my knowing,
You'd stay in me, even when I'm going.

One quick look in the mirror,
One deep breath of an error.
I try to shrug it off, and unthink,
Try to unstand on the brink—
'Til I didn't.

Took the rain on my side,
Prevent myself going in blind.
Untangle myself from this divine,
To keep my words mine—
'Til I didn't.

And then I jump on edged seats,
And achieve this little feat,
Trying to start the unable,
And keep it all stable.

Trying to act like I don't like
This moment of sudden spike,
Like I don't recognize the stars
Lining at the bars.
But I do.

Trying to unbelieve
The moments that I relive,
Denying that it haunts me on,
Even when you are gone.
But I do.

And I sit on edged seats,
And begin this little feat,
Making all the low able—
The beauty is in the unstable.

And on a night to remember,
A day to sit under,
New emotions cover my back,
New muse painting a stack.
For all I know that it used to hurt—
It's a day for me to blurt.
But for when I thought I could never,
One pulled the lever.
A season that pulled itself apart
Has found its way back to my heart.
Because for now, I'm falling again;
Cathartic, may it begin.
And so, on a spree of delusions,
I break the reasons.
The movies play their parts,
And the strings pull the carts.
Tomorrow fits well on—
A new day has begun.

Ludie Reverie

Never Be The Same
This Side of The Mountain
Little Willpower
Keep Keep Keep
Awake and Aware
Sweet, Innocent Child
The Things We Do
Salty and Nostalgic
Ever Existent
Unthink