

MERRY CHRISTMAS,
NOT THAT YOU CARE

THROUGH DECEMBER

If we make it through December,
Then we had walked past the embers.
We've brushed off moments of anger;
We have a whole year to un-remember.

If we make it through December,
Then we have a whole year to talk over.
Now that it is finally December,
Will this longing for stay forever?

The coldest bore me the warmest skies;
Does December ride on the price?
All will be fine, I surmise,
If we make it through December sighs.

If we make it through December,
Would that change the places we were?
All roads lead to messages and ciphers,
And a heart that longs to be deciphered.

If we make it through December,
Would that change our fears?
Sleeping in the duration of the year,
To wake up to have another to clear.

It's December, my little butterfly—
Cold, somber, wistful, and cloudy.
But we've made it through the skies;
We've made it through—what a surprise!

CHRISTMAS MAIL

All the trucks passing by the cold streets,
All the busy lives on busy streets.

My shoulders are numb and excited,
Yet fearful of the feeling bystanders incited.
I scour through the crowd outside,
Hoping I'll be situated on their blindside.

The tower rings, and it's already 10,
Two more hours to that Christmas scent.
Patiently waiting by the mailbox,
A confession, an admission, a flux.

All the trucks passing by the cold streets,
All the busy lives on busy streets.

The night kept getting colder and colder,
And I was on the bench getting older and older.
Is my Christmas mail stuck on the clouds?
Is it lost somewhere in the busy sounds?

Two minutes before the awaited ring,
I've sat too long that no fog was coming.
I burned all the lives I envied by that seat.
Two minutes past 12, it never lit.

And it sank to me that it's not coming.
'Til next year, I'll still be watching
All the trucks passing by the cold streets,
All the busy lives on busy streets.

FROM THE DIAL

Cold streets up on cold nights,
Cold breeze up on cold sighs.
Trees light up; the leaves warm up.
The lights flicker; gifts are opened up.

Will the bells of the Christmas Eve
Ever suffice the gap I heave?
Will the silence ever sing again?
Will the carols ever begin?

But what if I found a way back to your heart?
What if I could gift you an art?
Could I call you back if I wanted to?
Could I greet you "Merry Christmas" too?

Old poetic words come to rest,
And the spur of emotions take behest.
Will these gifts ever wrap you up?
Will the gold flickers make the rusting stop?

Every single moment that passes,
Every single time your thought crashes,
I pull my hand from the dial,
I pull my hand from my peace's betrayal.

But what if you found a way back to my heart,
And reveal this torment is just an art?
Would it happen if I wanted to?
Will you greet me "Merry Christmas" too?

SOBER UP

You would keep a bottle under your bed,
Beneath the countertop, and inside your head.
You've been chasing breaths lately,
And we have not been talking straightly.
Christmas came, and I wished upon a star,
Too loud that my heart burst far.

"It's only a matter of time 'til my heart stops,
I have to finally sober up"

And so the bottles became glasses,
'Til the glasses turned into ashes.
There became a window that let the light in,
More than the Christmas lights bore in.
Twinkling eyes by the twinkling mirror,
You've been over your nights of terror.

"It was an epiphany when I had stopped,
I tell you, you have to sober up."

A mans trash is another man's spirit.
And so touched and lived in it.
It's Christmas and I feel the flowing heat,
I could only drink so much, I could only breathe.
The world is spiral, the pedestal is your pavement,
Would I be saved in this peculiar amusement.

I need you to tell me how to stop,
Tell me how do I sober up.

WELL TIED

Fleshing out new ideas on the table,
Poinsettia flowers and writing fables.
We liked to stack our notes like pebbles,
Defied numbers like highland rebels.

You scribed a whole society I treasured,
You do that for work to keep reassured.
One could not separate the insured,
One could not separate the pressured.

Well tied to the tides of our talking,
Tiles flipping, boys and girls breathing.
Christmas must be a time for yearning,
For the moments of heavenly gleaming.

New people can deconstruct our old downfall,
But we will never make sense of it all.
We've found people for our eyes to behold,
But what turned this fireplace cold?

I'd like to keep my peace this Christmas,
But I could not stop thinking what it was.
All the plans we had to make something last,
Just for our presents to be stuck in the past.

Well tied to the times of early this year,
When to separate was the biggest fear.
We thought we'd have Christmas dear,
I don't miss you, but I hope you have a great year!
