

IN BETWEEN THE WAVES

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Foreword	1
In the Morning	2
Rule the Worlds	4
A Wish in the Air	5
Shade of Delight	6
In Conception	8
A Glint in the Sky	10
Great Things About	11
Fictional Nations	12
Decode	14
Symbols on the Wall	16
Casanova	17

FORWARD

Sitting beneath a sky lit by moonlight, with the gentle sound of waves touching my nightly boat, I find my thoughts drifting far away. "In Between the Waves" is a collection of poems that came to life during those late-night hours, when the ocean's endless expanse seems to reflect the deep emotions in my heart. This collection completes a trilogy, shining as the brightest of the three, reflecting something I've discovered along the way, something that they will never take away. Each poem tells of my journey through romance - both the wishing of and coming to terms with it. There are those quiet truths that can only be found in the calm moments between the waves.

IN THE MORNING

Seven strokes on my palm,
Twelve markings on the clock.
A smile that can break a dam,
And a laugh that can fly a dock.

An outage in my city,
Dust on the tip of my nose.
My thoughts on your great pity,
On the paths where the wind blows.

So, every time I open my eyes,
I doubt closing them again.
If this calls for a hefty price,
Then I would never lose this bargain.

Would it be easier if I didn't ask?
If these weren't the questions in which I bask?
'Cause the crown on my head
Has been at your feet to bend.
Longing to linger in your sleep,
Wanting to drown in your deepest of deep,
I ask by the time I go off in the evening,
"Will you think of me in the morning?"

RULE THE WORLDS

Friday morning, I'm looking at the shore.
Watching at waves to divulge from the unsure.
I try to close my eyes and forget how I feel,
I try to rhyme myself on the words that you fill.

And if the stars have to deny my spoken truth,
And if I am under the wrath of the heavens and its ruth.
Maybe it's time, to clear the indigo,
That wraps the clouds in the morning as I go.

After the day, down the stairs,
I keep my eyes on the sunset flair.
I hear your voice down the road I go,
And you steal the sunset's show.

Walking down the street of peril,
But with you, I feel something real.
The paths that wish to cross again closes,
And open for new truces.

The nights come to close in secret,
But drives itself to get a treat.
The skies that distances itself from the earth,
And meteor strikes that spells a word.

The dawn cracks open in the fields,
I try to hide in my secrets' shields.
New fields to plow and produce new words,
And create planets to rule the worlds.

A WISH IN THE AIR

I know that we are feeling the same,
I bet my life, my money, my whole fame.
And sometimes it feels frightening,
And in the night I keep on grinning.

And became hypnotized by your eyes,
I am wrapped in cunning of a prize.
And when you're not in the crowd I'm terrified,
And my restless days are on my side.

You could be the one that completes me,
You could be the one that sets me free.
A wish in the air is all I can do,
Shouting and hoping that it gets through.

The days become endless when you're not here,
Faces in the crowds and you're not there.
And I sit at the side wondering,
And crosses my heart in hoping.

And I keep hearing you laughter,
And every time I do, it keeps getting better.
Will I ever touch you like this again,
If not, don't let this end.

I could be the one that completes you,
I could be the one that heats you.
A wish in the air is all I send to you,
And I'm standing, praying that it gets through.

SHADE OF DELIGHT

Two notes that fight each other,
Where to think is to bother.
The past cries in chambers empty,
The present threads the memory.

A maze of dwindling fibers,
Fixing the star's numbers.
Hands fixated on praying
A wish that of no saying.

A new day brought by a new hum,
A heart that screams through thumps.
A sea that has munched me whole
Comes back to wash it all.

New rocks upon my cold feet,
New waves crash where I sit.
The silence of the waves' noise,
Flowing with your grace and poise.

NOT IN CONCEPTION

One night, I closed my eyes,
But instead of sleeping, I came to realize,
That new waves crash my shore,
And I can't deny it for sure.
Time was quite abusive on my side,
In which in my nights it subsides.
A scene painted between hours of awake,
Stories which I wish I could make.
Waking up with the biggest smile,
That could cover a whole mile.
Flying in a trance of inception
Of a thought that would not come in conception.

And so I taught myself not to talk,
Every time I see you when I walk,
I tell myself to forget it all.
But what you oppress, calls a haunting call.
And so every night I search your words,
When I find them, I am on new worlds.
The gush of the new breeze downs on me,
And I realize, this is a feeling that I could not free.
So I consult my past and decided not to talk,
But I see you in everywhere I look.
A secret clinched in my hands,
But you're voice comes to play with the band.

A GLINT IN THE SKY

I feel something thicker when I try to forget,
Beyond the knowledge of what I can recall.
New, yet familiar gushes of wave to wet,
A soul that somehow felt it all.

And it's more moonly than gloomy,
And I try to close my eyes in attempt to forget.
But the wrath comes to me stormly,
A deeper sense it begets.

And in forgetting, I remember it again.
And I'm falling in between the waves.
Tsunamis rising and washing the stains.
Beyond the horizon of the words I gave.

The loose ends tied with a smile,
A heart that touches the Sun's fiery glow,
A mind that lingers the extra mile,
A feeling I am yet to know.

But it blooms, like a lady in the night,
It gushes like water draped in peace,
Eyes shining brighter than the moonlight,
Straight to me and my heart that is pleased.

A story of a certain You and I,
A glint in the sky of my rainbow scarves.
A feeling that cannot die,
Above all the what if's, and the would have's.

There is a place I heard great things about.
Where lost souls come to meet their destiny.
Two poets on the way of finding out,
Trying to find the way clandestinely.
They talk of the nights they fight in between
The time of sleep that eludes them freely.
They both wrote on the places they had been,
A huge flame that burned each other's city.
Voices lingering like sparks in the night,
Their eyes sparkling and shining like embers.
Their destination just ahead of sight,
But murmurs shouting louder than thunders.
On the doorway, they cross their eyes to see
Realized they're each other's destiny.

FICTIONAL NATIONS

Keeping my mind on the stories I write.
A wave comes crashing to wash it all,
And my fictional nations come to fall.
Cascading in a reality that is my right.

A wave comes crashing to wash it all,
New stories unfold in pages of old,
Trees springing after the driest cold,
And towards a heavenly call.

And my fictional nations come to fall,
As they come to gather in unity,
To tug the tides that haunt me,
And fixing the rhythm in my haul.

Cascading in a reality that is my right,
To live in the traces of dignity
Stolen by flawed destiny.
But the cracks offer passage to new light.

If I could, I would make time stop,
Prevent the sun from running laps.
Freeze the moment, and see the dance,
Of the new muse of my trance.

A tug of forces beyond sleep,
Preventing the tongue to slip.
The one who know the next words,
One who understand my worlds.

And I'm gonna touch you,
And hold you like I want to.
Because what else should it be,
If you're the only one who decodes me.

If I could, I'd wait through these lines,
But every time I do, I do not feel fine.
Risking the danger of escalation,
Walking in the flames of emotion.

A wandering wonder in front of me,
Talking like she is me.
The rhyme that fixes my broken chains,
The words that keep me stained.

And I'm looking at you,
My strings through and through.
Because what else should it be,
If you're the only one who decodes me.

DECODE

SYMBOLS ON THE WALL

Do you hear my words?
Will you read symbols I draw on the wall?
The words that I shout in my sleep,
Transcending to the real world.
Give me my most needed call,
Tell me this normal day is deep.

Will you play the game I lay?
Will I linger in your nights?
My shadow wishing to appear to you.
Words I could only wish to say,
Realizations that echo and fight.
Your eyes pierce me through.

Will you tether yourself,
Even if I try to pull you in.
I'm trying to not fall back again,
But every time I do, I fail my self.
You're like someplace I've never been,
Somewhere that I could begin.

If I drag this for my nights and days,
Would the heartstrings fade away?
I try to kneel and pray a plea,
But the thoughts of you cover the sea.
I come to terms on something familiar,
You and I among the stars.

Sunray drapes on my blankets,
The eyes that have watched the sunset.
A hum in the air that keeps breathing,
A thought that would not be leaving.

Sunrise on the boulevard, I watch,
Birds in the sanctuary, I hatch.
In the peace, lightning catches a call,
When I'm alone, I bring them all.

Eyes on me like a prey in the forest,
You with me would not give you rest.
They conquer my nights, supposed to be mine,
And who am I if I am not fine?

There comes a day of deadly supernova,
The day that they call me a Casanova.
But if I'm gonna be beaten to death,
Then I'd rather give you my last breath.

And they will call me names,
And they will try to tarnish your fame,
A star that let a tramp touch its glow,
But this I let you know:

Casanova, my name they say,
But you are the only one I pray.
Sincerity is in between the calls I praise,
The reality in the lies they raise.

IN BETWEEN THE WAVES

In the Morning
Rule the Worlds
A Wish in the Air
Shade of Delight
In Conception
A Glint in the Sky
Great Things About
Fictional Nations
Decode
Symbols on the Wall
Casanova