foreword

The heart beats like tides against the shore—sometimes a quiet pulse, other times a storm crashing against the rocks. Atrimere is a collection of such rhythms, where longing and loss, memory and fate, rise and fall like waves under uncertain skies. These poems are not just words on a page but echoes of voices lost in the wind, confessions whispered in dim-lit rooms, and fleeting touches that linger longer than their welcome. The verses weave through time, tracing footsteps on concrete and fingers over windowpanes, always searching, always aching. Each piece is a fragment, yet together they form something whole—an intricate map of what it means to feel, to desire, to remember.

This is a journey through nights of quiet regret and days of unspoken truth, where every fleeting moment is pressed into permanence. It is a testament to the things left unsaid, to the ghosts of past encounters, and to the spaces between hello and goodbye. Perhaps you, too, have known the weight of unsent letters or the echo of a name unspoken. If so, then these words are for you. Step into the waters of Atrimere, where the heart and the depths are one and the same.

twenty-two hours of fairy lights

Fairy lights over sinking ships in desolated waters,
Wet eyes and burning desires over troubled waters.
Waters left uncharted by the unmanly invaders,
Pistols worn off by the overusage of the invaders.
The invaders that found something of great loss.
Knuckles and rustles—the reality of the loss.
The loss that spells out the greatest tragedy,
And freedom that led back to tragedy.
The tragedy that waited for men to be answered,
A lingering query of the lost to be answered.
The answers were elusive as the blue sky,
Were the lights just flecks of delusion in the sky?
Skybound tribes that live by their tiptoes,
And an army of thoughts that dance on tiptoes.
The tiptoes worn off by fights, losses, and bruises,
A mind of constant, unhealing wounds and bruises.
The bruises that come to haunt him every night,
The statements that speak over him every night.
Back to the night the death kicked the coffin,
And in just a matter of time, he was in the coffin.
The coffin that bore witness as he sunk deep,
With the sinking ship, the light over his eyes deep.

a bruised discography ^{RENJ}

No one could understand the languages they speak,
And no one could decode the tongues I tie.
A bruised discography infiltrated by deep think,
Pages of scrutiny in risographs, inked only to die.
The hands of those who receive it flatter themselves,
With praises they scribble on their memo pads,
Pretending to be involved in a cage of imprisoned creatives,
Waiting for sympathy from the alt-rock bands.

All a man could ever do was dream in his cell,
In a world where the colorful path leads to nothing.
So his storytelling is distilled to tracks over parcels,
His paintbrush turned to keyboards that keep on ringing.
Deactivation of the mind to suffice the body,
Surrender of the heart to satisfy the great whites,
And a murder of the soul to save the economy.
To live is to fight the urge for the work of art.

Calling off upsets the tinkered minds of those on top,
The terrace is but a series of zeroes and ones.
Your creative mind is a work of cells working non-stop,
No matter how fluid you are, you're a rigid work of numbers.
Smiles are calculated actions, and thoughts are bits.
Everything can be measured, everyone is a packet.
So are your dreams really yours, or are they just chemicals?
Does your bare existence fulfill some sort of prophecy?

the text book

Too much scene-setting; it was daytime.
The leaves rustle over the chalkboard.
What equals what; which was the crime?
No textbook chapter could fill in the void.

Simplicity is the most complex I've done,
Lay low or she'll notice your pen strokes.
Attention down, stage lights gone.
It would be too daring to sit with the blokes.

All the excuses of baked-up dreams.
Stolen voices in hallways above mine.
Whispers that are enough to be screams,
My eyes are but a witness to my crime.

Reckless boy turned to silent man;
The biggest star suddenly turned quiet.
All to not alert the spotlight sun,
To endure all these longings in private.

But will I regret not touching your hair?
Or not sharing the sketches of suppression?
Clear in the air, breathing the vilified flair.
Will the chalk turn to nails in repression?

Because someday, somewhere, someplace,
At work or at lunch, I'd look into you.
You'll finally catch my stare at your grace,
And you'd speak to me like the few.

And someday I'd regret not talking to you.
Now you have a family and a career peak.
So when heartbreak was just blue,
Why did I not have the nerve to speak?

But that someday might not come;
All it will ever be is another one of my stories.
But sure will be that I won't regret until it's gone—
Then I'll insert in the textbook these memories.

RENJ
if these walls

If these walls could only speak,
They'd sing a hymn for you.
Over pasts and months of winding up
To the legs of fates and dusts,
You still are the peak of it,
The one, the perfect shade of blue,
The real over these props,
The shiny one over these dusts.

And when I came to stare at her,
I longed to find yours.
And when the iris of her eyes shrank,
I waited for yours to get drunk.

If these walls could only speak,
Then they'd take account of my sins.
The thought of you isn't bad, is it?
Knowing I had a plate to share with.
My sheets held on to how I squeaked.
When she came over, they just grinned,
But when it's you, it's a mega meet-and-greet,
And they vitalize my evil deed.

And when I came to talk to her,
I longed to hear yours.
So I plugged you in my mind as she talked,
But my eyes were fixated on your walk.

Dark nights, and my darker thoughts.
Brighter days, and my brighter sheets.
All this time, it had been shades of gray,
But you make me feel there's more to this dismay.
If she thinks of a man of her own too,
Then it isn't evil of me to think the same too.
If I am just a point of reference in her scales,
Then you'll raise the bar of these rails.
Golden and true are the sinful frauds,
Lasting and strong are the fleeting thoughts.

touch and go

The wait was too long,
Endless and looping on a song.
A time taken for granted,
An end to something that never started.

Headfast to a flower I outgrew,
Many of them, true to a few.
Serene as the view might be,
But the sound of longing wants to be free.

But the dreams never materialized,
In the meantime, it wasn't realized.
Touch-and-go, flight-and-fall,
The longings lasted, eclipsed them all.

But then something came back,
Stronger than the attack.
The wait is over, no waiting anymore.
Touch-ground, it has arrived for more.

The rebirth of a feeling I've buried.
Through many, it has persisted.
I never knew I was longing for you,
Until I bumped again from these few.

It did not work out the first time,
And there is no reason for this time.
So that nature in me was foreign,
Touch-and-go, it went.

RENJ
a mindful

A dishonest reaction to the most genuine feeling,
Scared that this mutuality might just be fleeting.
The night feels impossible, yet it's right there—
Two souls touching, blinded by the glare.

Trying to prevent an unstoppable force—
Black holes, saucers, and all universality there is.
They try to exude firmness over brittle wood,
A hold-on they wish could last for good.

For every drop of water that has vaporized,
And every song they have memorized,
There is no denying that none of it was fake,
That this feeling is theirs to take.

They know their days have been truly awful,
Yet they also know the other is a mindful.
Flecks of light turn to stardust over their beds,
And their small talks replay in their heads.

But they couldn't possibly be in love, right?
Both are flying over the walls at night.
The waves crash, but they never let salt air in,
Yet they realize the soup is bland within.

Abusive were the forces their fences were for,
But could they really be shattered by handing over a pie?
Forever neighbors—never more, never greater.
All is fake and fabricated if they reject the truth.

The eyes can tell a lot; they also read a lot.
And it's obvious even without much thought.
But the mind is sound, the heart is not, right?
Is this really the time to board the flight?

Yet if they force it to be, then all they feel is unreal.
And every night, they realize they are closer still.
So the dishonest glaze over their broken minds—
A genuine thought, blazed by their denying minds.

RENJ

at midnight

Half-shut eyes, half-stricken clock.
Rolling thunders, rolling thoughts dock.
All this censorship comes to flock,
And in a tidal dance, they come to lock.

Suitable faces on streets come my way,
Great candidates go on to play.
All the show-ups will come to make fun of me,
And I did wish I had set forth the greater me.

Because I did not know what I lost that night,
What reality I did not treat right.
And in this dim hour, they come to light,
And it comes to haunt me at midnight.

Far-right truths, far-left emotions.
Growing regrets, growing suppositions.
Uncharted waters over my dark supervision,
The silent crept over my indecision.

Befitting jewels come to shine their might,
Appropriate actions are in sight.
All the right writers will come to this site,
Screaming over the things I should've done that night.

Because I did not know the fight I lost that night,
And the lack thereof was not right.
We could've made it out alive with the light,
But now, it's just a random thought at midnight.

feet of concrete

RENJ

Four eyes crossing over feet of concrete,
The pavements are the ones who witness.
The trees were once a fortress to admire,
And the shadow of the sun creates your initials.
My Octobers and Novembers were incomplete,
And on a January, a run would change this mess.
Chaos it had become, the one I desire,
And put my service to these thoughts of potential.

No one knows how we talk under the sunroof,
No one knows how I memorize your type of goof.
Call the ages, and the calendars will be brown,
But my stare at you is not one to be down.

So I entered bars trying to forget you,
But this chance encounter comes running back.
Will these tessellated bricks fit like we do?
Oh, tell me that you feel the same fluxes too.
Come back to me, where you do belong,
My heart is reserved for you to be back.
So I call you through feet of hard, hot cement,
And I see your lips crack with thoughts I wish.

No one knows that the air felt damp and moist,
No one knows that my gun was an empty hoist.
Call the untouched and the most picky,
But my stare at you is not of mutiny.

No one knows how my hands wrapped you up,
Or how my eyes beamed your ghosted life.
We were lost souls in a sea of our choice,
And regret is the only thing to come out of this voice.
Touch and go, flights and lows, it was always you,
Ups and downs, lefts and rights, it was always you.
What was it so telling that I told stories of you at my bed,
And the only ones who could hear were the dead?

I touched, and I knew what no one knew,
It never died, and it had always been you.
One time could turn into infinite tries,
Let this be it, let this be the prize.

RENJ

open houses

Open houses, wide and shut doors.
Races and taming the wild horses.
All intoxicated by the thoughts of you,
All for the fact, through and through.

And my eyes swung right open,
The sound of my heart is just a coven.
Flashing lights over fleeting minds,
But permanent fights over lost hands.

And I wish to never lose this feeling,
And for this to not just be fleeting.
Because if so, I'd never go there again,
I'd never sit on Luce again.

Two days on, and head bangs first.
Rekindling thoughts for the thirst.
Run for the one thing I'd always known,
To not give the fight up if it's not you.

And it was never over, even after the fact,
So the rekindling is just a pact.
Open seas and open thighs
Behind the closed doors of our lost sighs.

I wouldn't lose this feeling,
But the candle wax made it fleeting.
I sit by the side where we once had been,
I'd never enter Luce again.

And so the thought of permanence
Is just the biggest wish for reverence.
Was I dumb to be a slave of my desire,
Were you dumb to be the master of this fire?

And the friction of our skin brought air,
The air brought death to the flare.
Calling the wicks we ordered to be wet,
And we wished our tangled selves not to meet.

And I never lost this feeling.
But all that was just fleeting.
Flashbacks to the places we have been,
I'd never go to Luce again.

what a window pane RENJ

It's gonna be a season, an epidemic for them,
Stitching lovelorn dresses and circling hems.
Wedding rings, and the times of bell ringings,
Roses and rows of flowers, reals and flings.
True to word and true to a voice that cracks,
And later, it's just words that took them back.

Oh, what a window pane has this life become.

Buzzing headlights and crying starlets,
City skyscrapers over lost ringlets.
Little packets of emotions left to feel,
Little more feeling of what's real.
A routine that keeps on giving its maximum,
That is the lowest of a human minimum.

Oh, what a window pane has this life become.

The sky looks good with white clouds on blue,
What a beautiful crane that shadows this room too.
The metal frames flamed up to burn its feathers,
And the headlights crashed over its embers.
And in her state of prime and superiority,
The mundane scaffolds took her gently.

Oh, what a window pane has this life become.

RENJ
the influx

The influx of chants comes rushing,
Years of labor, grieving, and yearning,
Brick over brick, and song by song,
Through the windy maze to the stage I belong.

And if tears are a testament to anything,
Then they show both the death and the glowing.
The music of the noise, the star of the day,
And for my dream, I chose to stay.

And when I'd win, you'd call me praise,
So I yearned to give more to the race.
And when all was high and gold at night,
You came crashing while I slept at night.

Your dreams—I turned them to reality,
My callused hands built your evil plot.
What called for these knives to stab me,
Knowing that my pennies made them shiny?

When I burned myself down for our dream,
And let the thought of it scream,
Then why did you make it your own,
When I paved the only path you've known?

And when I'd lose, you said I was a fighter,
So I longed to be higher and brighter.
But when the curtains fell to the floor,
I realized you just wanted more.

I was the only light you saw,
I eclipsed the moon you stared at, free.
I could put your payroll to a definitive end,
But you know I'd give myself for you to lend.

And when I fight, I still picture you.
And when I cry, I long for the scent of you.
Make it known to that heart of yours,
That mine is a hollow house for yours.

the final bow^{RENJ}

All this drama over an asphalt road,
Cracked open by the thoughts of the cold.
Has the maxima burned the witches down?
Or did it stutter over their best of gowns?

Strange walkers over my estranged alley,
Lost legends finding an asylum to see.
Break hearts to stand over them again,
And keep souvenirs to where they have been.

It isn't death that throw these people down,
But the rusting of their old crown.
Polish over polish of prehistoric times,
Varnish over varnish of several lifetimes.

Strange walkers over their estranged dreams.
By the end of that tunnel, they forget who they've been.
Queens and kings of kingdoms they only know,
Hate to be unknown but keep their profiles low.

They all walk parallel with the pedestrian lanes,
The colors of their suits matching the asphalt road,
And their pants are a band-aid for the pain,
That the quest for fire only brings you cold.

My estranged alley, my estranged dream.
Tell me who I am by the end of this tunnel.
Am I a lost legend by this time of now?
Is this the final act, the final bow?
